Working in the health and social care sectors

The health and social care sectors currently employ approximately 1 in 10 of the working population in the UK. These sectors cover a range of services across many organisations within the public, private and voluntary sectors, including hospitals, hospices, nursing, care homes and many other types of provision.

The programme's structure

As an assistant practitioner, your apprentice will work as part of a health and social care team, they will have direct contact with patients, service users or clients and provide high quality and compassionate care. While on-programme, they will be supported by their tutor who will review their progress during the 12 to 18 months against the standard to ensure they are prepared for end-point assessment.

Ready for training

- Initial assessment
- English and maths training
- On-programme training to meet the requirements of the standard
- Gateway readiness self-assessment

Set for assessment on completion of training and functional skills

End-point assessment methods are:

Multiple-choice test

- 60 multiple-choice questions covering communication, health intervention, personal and people development, health, safety and security and equality and diversity

Observation of practice

- 90-minute practical observation in the workplace

Evidence portfolio and interview

- The portfolio must include direct observation in the workplace and reflective accounts completed by the apprentice
- Evidence covering communication, health interventions, people and personal development and health, safety and security must be included
- 30 to 60 minute interview in the form of a question and answer session

Go further in your career

After a period of working and gaining experience, your apprentice may be able to work towards an assistant practitioner or nursing associate post or, providing they meet the entry requirements, apply to university to become a registered healthcare practitioner.
